The luminescent graphene quantum dot (GQD) probes is an important type of inorganic fluorophores. It is used as a new class of nanomaterials in the fields of bio-imaging, electronics, photonics, and so on. This paper presents the recent developments of luminescent GQD probes and reviews their preparation methods, optical properties, and applications in luminescent probe materials. The preparation methods, optical properties, and application include: synthesizing GQD material by thermal method, solvent method, chemical oxidation method, and exciton GQD can be prepared by simple oxidation of graphene. Optical properties of GQD includes photoluminescence spectroscopy and photoluminescent lifetime. Optical probes can be used in the fields of in vitro, in vivo, and in situ bio-imaging. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of manufacturing a pixel structure. More particularly, the present invention relates to a method of manufacturing a pixel structure that has an improved aperture ratio and the improved aperture ratio can be regulated by controlling an arrangement of a data line. 2. Description of Related Art In recent years, with the advance of semiconductor technology, the size of the active region of a pixel has also been becoming smaller and smaller. Since the active region is smaller, each pixel has to include one or more transistors to accomplish a signal process. The transistors of the pixel structure in the prior art are typically amorphous silicon transistor. However, the amorphous silicon transistors have a very small light-permeability, as a result, the aperture ratio of the pixel structure is adversely affected. With the advantage of high mobility, amorphous silicon is currently selected to be the material for the active layer of the pixel structure. To achieve the purpose of
