When it comes to message marketing, there are definitely a lot of rules to follow. If you break any of these rules, it can definitely throw a wrench in your project's momentum. However, it isn't a reality that you need to stick to all of them and follow them blindly if you want to get good results. The only thing that you need to do is to know what each rule is and when you should break it. Do not send out messages as attachments When you send out messages, it can be sent as an email with a file attachment. While you do not need to, you definitely do not want to do this as it is a much riskier tactic. While it can get through most inbox filters, it can easily be blocked by a potential customer. So, it's not a good idea to send this type of message. Another important rule to know about is the no spam rule. While this is not about sending out a lot of marketing messages, it means not sending out messages to random people who you do not know. It does not mean you cannot send out messages to a company who has a particular issue that they are sending out but your message will have to be personalized to them. If you know who the person is, then there is nothing stopping you from sending them a personalized message. When you send out a personalized message, you are not spamming them. However, if you hit the spam button, then you are sending out bulk messages to a lot of people. So it's not a
